Event planner business card template

Startup Costs: Under $2,000 Home Based: Can be operated from home. Part-time: Can be operated part-time. Franchises available? No, if you're a premier party-giver in the crowd, then you can have the ball as an event planner. You'll work for private and corporate clients, creating, planning and organizing everything from bar mitzvahs to new product launches, corporate picnics, mystery dinners, sales meetings and Valentine's balls. You'll do everything from theme design to sending invitations to party organizing, entertainment and catering. And you'll negotiate with suppliers and suppliers to make sure your customer gets the most out of their money. Event planning is a field with the possibility of development. While it used to be the case that a company can impress customers or sales teams with a tray of donuts or cold cuts and a slideshow, in today's sophisticated world it takes a splashy event to get things done. And on the personal front, few people today have the time - or energy - to plan and organize anything. The advantage of an event planning company is that it is creative, demanding, and if you specialize in corporate events, you will probably have weekends for free for yourself. If you are a person who can be better? As an event planner, you need to be organized and detail-oriented on the glitch. You need to have a big creative streak to come up with new ideas and planning skills to be able to implement them. And you have to be a person of people capable of dealing with any temperament or volatile artists to be steady company president. Customers of the market can be individuals, companies or groups, such as charities, associations and organizations. Place ads on local yellow pages and newspapers. Connect with local event-oriented retailers: florists, photographers, sound companies, camera companies, catering companies, hotels and country clubs, and musicians. Leave your brochures with you and ask for referrals. And don't forget advertising agencies and public relations companies. Plan a small party for free for your local charity in exchange for free advertising. If you have an inside scoop at a corporate event in your area - up-and-coming a grand opening, sales meeting or product unveiling - send a sales letter and brochure, then follow up from your phone. Hardware You need to run, you need a computer with regular office software, laser printer, fax, and desktop publishing software to create enterprise proposals. Don't forget your phone, calendar and planning book. Interest Industries Business Cards competitions are an important part of your company's advertising. They are also one of the cheapest, especially if you are designing your own.
